How to find your polling place

The Minnesota Secretary of State's Web site has an easy to use tool to find out where your vote.

It can be accessed at <http://pollfinder.sos.state.mn.us/>

You simply type in your county or zip code and it leads you through steps to find the exact location of your polling place. It also tells you which candidates will be on your ballot.

New accounting system bugging U

MINNEAPOLIS — The University of Minnesota is trying to squash some bugs in a $50 million accounting system.

The new Enterprise Financial System handles all of the university's business.

Whether it's a payment to an employee, or a payment to a vendor, everything passes through the EFS.

The main problem seems to be that the system is really complex. But users say there have been other problems as well, such as data errors, and some don't fully trust the balances they're seeing for accounts they use.

Financial officials say they understand the concerns, and say they're doing their best to fix the problems and make the system easier to use.

Chief Financial Officer Richard Pfitzenreuter says the last time the university switched accounting systems was in 1991, and it took two years to iron out the bugs.

Hillary Clinton returning to state

DULUTH — Sen. Hillary Clinton is returning to Minnesota for some Election Eve campaigning on behalf of Barack Obama and DFL Senate candidate Al Franken.

Clinton will join Franken at an Obama-Franken Get-Out-The-Vote rally in Duluth on Monday.

Details will be announced when they're confirmed. Sen. Amy Klobuchar also will speak at the rally.

Clinton was in Minnesota on Oct. 21 for two campaign rallies — one in Minneapolis for Franken and one on the Iron Range for Obama.

Her husband, former President Bill Clinton, was in Minneapolis last week for an Obama-Franken rally.

SPCO to celebrate 50th anniversary

ST. PAUL — The St. Paul Chamber Orchestra is going worldwide to celebrate its 50th anniversary season.

The SPCO will host an International Chamber Orchestra Festival in the Twin Cities in January.

Three European orchestras and one from the U.S. will join the SPCO for 17 concerts over four weeks.

The festival runs Jan. 8-30. Concerts will be performed at nine venues, including the Ordway Center and the SPCO Center in downtown St. Paul.

Each of the visiting orchestras will have one week in residency.

Programs will include baroque music, works by Beethoven and Mozart and modern pieces.

Comfort in words

Don Roberts communicates by directing his eyes to certain places on a letterboard, which personal care attendant Lori Steen is holding for him. When she names the right letter, he blinks; if she says the wrong letter, he opens his eyes wide.

Pastor Don Roberts battles Lou Gehrig's Disease shares hope, inspiration with new book

By Sara Gilbert Frederick
Special to The Free Press

MANKATO — The foreword was the hardest part for Don Roberts to write.

The devotions that make up the bulk of Roberts' new book, "Words of Hope in the Midst of Lou Gehrig's Disease," had been written one at a time for the Bethlehem Lutheran Church's monthly newsletter during the past six years. When he was persuaded to put them all together in a book, it was just the foreword he had left to compose.

But writing the foreword meant that Roberts had to look backward.

He had to write about recognizing symptoms that seemed suspicious. He had to write about being diagnosed with amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, also known as ALS or Lou Gehrig's disease. He had to write about resigning his post as pastor at Bethlehem Lutheran. He had to write about deciding to be put on a ventilation tube and losing his ability to actually speak with those around him.

"It brought back painful memories to me," he said, each word dictated one letter at a time by the movement of his eyes across a letterboard held in front of him. "I have been through much with this illness. For instance, I used to be a jogger. I don't purposefully forget what it was like, but I don't think about it every day."

He prefers to think about it hopefully, which is why he wrote "Words of Hope." It's also why he'll be at the 88th annual Nordic Bazaar on Wednesday at Bethlehem Lutheran Church, where his book will be available for sale.

"I hope it will encourage people who are going through rough times," he says. "It may or may not be an illness, but everyone goes through rough times. I hope this book will help them."

Don Roberts with his wife, Bonnie. They learned how to use the letterboard together before Roberts was put on a ventilator in 2000.

Roberts has lived with ALS for 13 years. He is in a wheelchair, unable to move. He cannot speak out loud and can only communicate with his eyes. Even his breathing is controlled by a ventilator, which has been keeping him alive since 2000.

But his limitations are only physical.

"He still has the same wonderful sense of humor that's he's always had," says Lori Ruthenbeck, a long-time friend and member of Bethlehem Lutheran Church. "His mind is still absolutely active and clear."

Arena officials removed bins due to concerns

Q: What happened to the bright-red steel collection boxes for old clothes, shoes and linens that were set out about town not long ago in the interest of recycling? They seem to have disappeared, at least the one prominently visible next to the All Seasons Arena. It was well used. Did the business model for this enterprise fail?

A: No, All Seasons Arena manager Paul Ostoff decided to remove the collection bin "out of respect for the organizations that we have currently in the community that are providing those types of services."

Thrift stores, specifically ones operated by Minnesota Valley Action Council and the Salvation Army, have said the company, U'SAGain, is diverting clothes and money from local families and nonprofits. The company has said that hasn't been proven and says its boxes are a good way to save clothes from landfills.

Initially, Ostoff agreed. It also helped that the arena received 2 cents per pound of clothing in the bin, which averaged about 400 pounds per week. That's $416 per year, which would have been spent on helping disadvantaged youth play hockey.

But Ostoff said the arena is "pretty sensitive to the needs of the community" and decided the alleged harm to local residents outweighed the cash.

Asbestos crimps library's plans

Carpeting project hits major snag

By Brian Ojanpa
Free Press Staff Writer

WASECA — Asbestos, that nagging bugaboo in older buildings, has put a crimp in recarpeting plans for the Waseca-Le Sueur Regional Library and raised a question regarding who will pay.

When workers went to remove the 19-year-old carpeting, asbestos tile was discovered underneath in older sections of the building.

That means asbestos abatement procedures must be done before the new carpeting is installed, and that has caused some confusion over how the total cost of the project shall be paid.

The library is the main branch of a nine-library cooperative involving Le Sueur County, Waseca County and the city of Waseca. Each has contributed financially to the Waseca facility, per state law.

Each city where libraries are located is responsible for library services and building maintenance, according to the library system's Joint Powers Board agreement.

Which entity or entities pay for carpet replacement is less clear.

The recarpeting would cost an estimated $52,000 — nearly $38,000 for carpeting and about $14,000 for asbestos abatement.

Waseca-Le Sueur Regional Library Director Theresa Meadows said the library would be closed for about a week once work began.

"That's the best estimate we have right now, but there's a good chance it could be longer," she said.

The Waseca City Council is expected to act on the issue at an upcoming meeting.

Antique show draws in die-hards

By Brian Ojanpa
Free Press Staff Writer

MANKATO — As antique aficionados know, there is junk, and there is junkie.

So it was at Madison East Center during the weekend, where exhibitors of antique collectibles crammed the mall, offering vintage esoterica ranging from beer bottles and baseball cards to old maps and period pencils.

There was pop-culture quirkiness (a pair of stiletto-heeled women's sneakers) and the once-common-but-now-remarkable (bygone era strings of Christmas lights that actually were made in the U.S.).

And there were Harold and Barbara Schwichtenberg of Waseca, who harbor a passion for a particular collectible — old bottle openers.

Harold Schwichtenberg was all smiles after scoring a cast iron elephant, circa 1930s, that had been fashioned into an opener.

Candidates get in last jobs

Coleman, Franken trade heated accusations

The Associated Press

ST. PAUL — Months of tension between U.S. Senate candidates Norm Coleman and Al Franken spilled into their last debate Sunday night, as the Republican and Democrat traded heated accusations about allegations against Coleman in a lawsuit.

It started immediately, as Coleman denied that he's taken any money or gifts from supporters without disclosing it. That charge stems from sworn statements in a civil lawsuit filed last week in Texas, claiming Coleman's friend and donor Nasser Kazeminy funneled $75,000 to a business that employs Coleman's wife in order to enrich the senator.

"The answer is no," Coleman said when asked if the allegations are true. He then swung back to his claim that Franken is responsible for a TV ad about the allegations, which shows a clip of reporters asking Coleman about the alleged payments to his wife's employer and which the senator said defames her. Franken's campaign isn't running the ad, which is paid for by Democrats in Washington.

"You have an ad that's defaming my wife," Coleman said. "I think there's a line in this business. You can take any shot

"You have an ad that's defaming my wife. I think there's a line in this business. You can take any shot you want at the candidate. Mr. Franken, rather than rejecting it, is promoting it."

— Norm Coleman

"This is not about Norm Coleman's wife," Franken said. "This is about Senator Coleman's sugar daddy."

— Al Franken

you want at the candidate. Mr. Franken, rather than rejecting it, is promoting it."

Franken replied that Coleman must answer questions about the allegations — and rejected the idea that discussion of it is an attack on Laurie Coleman.

"This is not about Norm Coleman's wife," Franken said. "This is about Senator Coleman's sugar daddy."

But that didn't end the recriminations between Coleman and Franken. For the first time after five debates, Coleman personally criticized Franken on an issue other Republicans hammered for months — that statements and writings in his previous careers as a comedian and writer betrayed an angry sensibility unsuited to the U.S. Senate.

"I think folks have a right to look at the character, to look at the record," Coleman said. "Jokes about rape, is that a line? Writing pornography for Playboy, is that a line? Calling a Supreme Court justice sexist, is that a line?"

The sniping between Coleman and Franken left a wide opening for the Independence Party's Dean Barkley, who presented his third-place candidacy as an alternative for voters tired of what he called "the most negative campaign in Minnesota's history."

"I ask people, do you think either Al or Norm will change the way Washington works?" Barkley said. "That's a question you have to ask yourself."

ROBERTS: Credits his illness for instilling hope

Roberts is still the first person Ruthenbeck calls when she or someone in her family needs prayer. She's not the only one. In fact, although Roberts can no longer serve as a pastor at church, he has continued to minister to others throughout his illness.

"I can still listen to people," he says. "I can pray about their concerns."

He was also able to participate in the weddings of two of his sons by writing their wedding meditations. He did the same for Lori, one of his caregivers, and was even able to give her away during the ceremony. He also baptized his first grandson, Ethan.

"I had (my wife) Bonnie move my hand," he explains, "and (my caregiver) Lori used the board for the words."

Writing devotions has been a big part of his ministry as well. Ruthenbeck says Roberts' monthly contribution to the church newsletter, as well as his continued presence every week at church, has inspired her on several levels.

"Your issues, your illnesses, the things you're dealing with — they all seem so minimal when you think of Pastor Don and what he lives with every day," she says. "But also, we all admire his openness. He admits that this has challenged his own faith, and he shares that very openly and honestly."

Each of the almost 80 devotions in "Words of Hope" were born out of Roberts' own struggles; he says he could not have written them if not for living with ALS. But the overarching theme is not about his suffering. Instead, the focus is on hope.

"This illness has made me a more hopeful person," he says. "That is an irony, but problems can be an alchemist."
